This comment is addressing the FCC's proposed rule, Empowering Consumers to Prevent and Detect Billing for Unauthorized Charges, etc.

This comment supports the FCC's authority to regulate issues related to telecommunications billing, and endorses the agency to defend consumer rights. The act of inserting false, unexpected, or unauthorized charges is a variant of theft and should in no way be endorsed by the federal government.

The FCC should use its role to ensure that this rule moves forward, thus protecting consumers and requiring telecommunications providers to be transparent in its billing practices.
