

7521247181.txt

The "Open Internet" is not broken. You guys do not need to fix it. Honestly when it comes to the government and it's internet endeavors their track record has lately been less than good. and by less than good I mean bad. this will look like an attempt for you guys to essentially shut down websites you don't agree with or like the content of not by removing them from the internet but by slowing their pages so bad they never load. innovators won't be able to easily spread word of their products because they can't afford to buy a key to the lock holding the anchor on their internet speeds. Please, there are no good reasons to do this. only bad ones.