The lack of broadband access across the US by more than one provider appears to be a large scale monopoly. We have slower download speeds and higher prices than most industrialized countries. This should be illegal.

For the past three years I have lived in a place (S. Oregon) with two broadband internet services. Charter Cable and Ashland HomeNet, and have found their competition results in a better service for all. These companies that collude to divide up the country into non-competition regions should be charged with racketeering.
