Net neutrality maybe a cornerstone for the political agenda on this very day in the US. Ending this freedom and letting big companies further monopolize freedoms in this country is both unconstitutional and unethical. I highly urge the FCC and its appointed director, who happens to be a former lobbyist of these very companies, which is ridiculous and further more shows how bought out and clueless President Obama and the US government as a whole has become, to put an immediate end to this issue and leave the internet to the people where it belongs. For too long this government has over looked the power of its youth. Guess what. We are here and we are making our voices heard like never before and this issue will be met with serious political changes in our government if our demands are not heard. We want these companies to stop lying and we want representation based on the people's voices. Not capital. Again. Leave the Internet alone and stop taking money from companies that want to take our liberties and freedoms.
