

I think the policy of not allowing any access to the internet on aircraft must have its reason. The signal from our devices may interfere with the function of equipment on board. I think we are putting the passengers in risk, if we allow internet on the aircraft. We simply don't know what people can do with their devices once they get the access to the internet. There are too many unknown factors which may lead us to danger.

Besides, I think there are enough entertaining equipments already. We are allowed to bring magazines, newspapers or watch movies and more on board. I don't see why we need to have internet access on aircraft just to have more entertaining options. I think we need to put up with it for the safety issue. It's for our own good after all!
