This ruling affects the entire economy, and I get the feeling it was made by a judge a bit removed from the full effects this will have. We already pay for different speeds based on what service is even available in our location. Do we really need to allow companies--already in a monopoly in many regions--demanded we pay more to access certain sites? (The answer is no.) That's like a taxi driver making you pay more to go to the bank than to the airport, regardless of the distance. NO ADDITIONAL FEES. The internet is a telecommunications SERVICE.
