Because...

Everything I do on the Internet (and its predecessor of 35 yrs ago), has been at whatever speed my network can manage to wherever I wanted to go. My initial exposure was at a High School guidance office in the late 70s and involved searching for colleges to possibly attend (and playing too many hours of Star Trek). Would an Internet without Net Neutrality directed me to the same schools?

When it evolved for general availability in the early 90s, again, whatever speed my network could manage to whatever site I desired.

Now, a former Cable executive wants to gut the necessity of Net Neutrality. NO, NO, NO say I !!! Preserve equal access for all. It was a foundation, and should remain so.
