The World Wide Web is 100% free and open to innovation at all levels of society. To hand over the controls of the Internet to private telecommunications providers with no public oversight would be like making the entire highway system into a toll-based system. You'll crush competition. The system needs to be open to all participants with equal opportunity. The Internet needs to be classified as a telecommunications system subject to oversight by an FCC that believes in the rights of the people over the rights of a few powerful telecom providers.
