

7521318044.txt

I oppose any regulations that would establish a tiered level of service and allow ISPs to provide improved bandwidth to some sites over others. Such power or authority would grant the provider the ability to control what their customers see, read, and hear without the customers knowledge or direct feedback. In areas where there is only one or two providers this could result in corporate censorship and should be viewed with the same suspicion as a media company owning multiple newspapers and TV stations in the same market.