Let's just be honest here, there is literally nothing I can say that will have any effect on anything that happens. I would really just appreciate not being fucked over, and I'm fairly sure that everyone else would greatly appreciate that, too. It would be wonderful if no changes were made to net neutrality, and honestly the fact that it's even being considered in a serious manner is ludicrous. You know as well as everyone else does that Time Warner Cable and Comcast are some of the absolute worst companies on earth, and giving them even more power would be a (putting it dramatically) a disaster. Now if anyone does happen to be reading this I'm asking you as a reasonable human being to please make no changes in Time Warner Cable or Comcast's favor. Also know that if the Federal Communications Commission did do away with net neutrality that it would come under so much flak from the internet that I understand no one wants. Just look at what the internet can do when it comes together as a whole.

Thank you for (potentially) reading this and your time, or even just counting my message as a number in a simple statistic.
