

7521329834.txt

I would like to urge the FCC to reconsider the consequences of their actions, and how the passing of this bill will impact the internet negatively. The only party benefitting from such a bill would be the ISP's that on the short-term could benefit of selling priority access connections, but the fact that this bill will severely hamper and slow down the growth and use of the internet, the long-term net loss will end up greater for even them. Even though I'm not a US citizen, I am a citizen for the world, and I'm worried that this might not only be for the harm of the American people, but also the population of the entire world when ISP's around the globe will follow in the footsteps of their siblings in the States. The internet is reliant on its anarchistic nature, and of equal providing of access. I would like to urge the FCC to reclassify ISP's to common carriers as this would ensure the neutrality of the internet, and ensure that the greatest technological feat of the human race, will remain great.