

7521334053.txt

I oppose the proposed rules. A free and open internet is crucial to providing a level playing field for businesses and to protecting consumers' rights. Ideally, internet service providers should be regulated as utilities. Imagine if electricity suppliers were allowed to charge different rates depending on what brand appliances consumers plugged into their outlets? Unencumbered availability of power allowed the economy to flourish in the 20th century and unencumbered availability of the internet is what will allow the economy to flourish in the 21st.