I am writing these comments for my mother who lives on the family farm in Northwest Ohio. My mother and father began watching RFD - TV in August 2003. They relied on the programming on RFD - TV to keep up to date with the grain and livestock markets. And, not just the agricultural markets but RFD - TV has provided family programming about many different facets of rural living: grain farming, cattle raising, horsemanship, gardening, ecological science. My mother is pretty much home bound and relies on RFD-TV for wholesome tv programming.
