The RFD-TV channel is extremely important to me as it comprises 90% of my viewing time. I pay an extra premium just to have it available to me through Comcast. Being a retired farmer, the programming on RFD-TV is invaluable to me. I am interested in what the markets are doing with crops and livestock. It is refreshing to watch programs about the rural way of life and those with wholesome family values. The general public does not connect our farming way of life with the food they eat, and therefore, our generations today are growing farther and farther away from the agricultural community. I am in no way against the merger of Comcast and Time Warner; however, I think it is vitally important that they consider keeping this channel in their line-up.
