Comcast and Time Warner should not be allowed to merge. Perhaps their cable businesses do not overlap, but they own content production and distribution companies (Comcast: NBS, Universal, E!, NBCSN, Golf Channel, etc; Time Warner: HBO, Cinimax, TBS, TNT, Turner Classic Movies, Cartoon Network, CNN, Headline News, New Line Cinema, New Line Home Entertainment, New Line Television, Warner Bros Pictures, Warner Bros Studios, The CW, Looney Tunes, etc.) and controlling that much of what we consume would create an unfair marketplace for other distribution channels, such as satellite (Dish, DirectTV), movie theaters, and internet-based companies (Netflix) that need this content to survive.
