Internet service providers should follow a system of net neutrality. Without net neutrality it is discriminative and the internet becomes a contradiction to the constitution. It is the number one principle of America: that everyone is equal. This should not only prove true when comparing person to person, but also with platforms, sites, content, and others. While broadband service providers claim that they have no plans to degrade quality or block specific content, this was proven false when Comcast purposefully slowed P2P communications. It would be a mistake not to commit to net neutrality.
