Net neutrality is an important series of regulations that protect us from exploitation by telecommunications companies. Consider that the federal government heavily subsidized the initial laying of telecommunications lines - i.e., those same lines that these companies use to deliver telephone, television, and internet services. Because the government subsidized them so heavily, it is only fair that the government is allowed to regulate them. These companies do not OWN the phone/cable lines, as they claim - you (referring to the federal government) do! Stand up for yourself and regulate these companies!
