We have the slowest internet speeds of any major industrialized nation, and the internet is the gateway to economic expansion for all people. People can further their education, start businesses and build their own American Dream. Cable companies refuse to invest in the infrastructure required to upgrade our internet (and therefore, our economic opportunities here and abroad) and this is just another nail in the coffin of expanding and maintaining what is now almost a necessity for every American. Cable companies have no right to interfere with the market by setting the rules,
