

7521347264.txt

The Internet is one of the most incredible systems for allowing people to innovate and communicate, and on one of the most level fields humanity has come up with. Unfortunately, the companies selling the infrastructure will find it much more profitable to sell off this level field to the highest bidder. And since running this infrastructure, just like any regulated utility, tends toward natural monopoly, the invisible hand of the market can't correct it by itself.