Is this seriously being considered? For years, I have heard of 'bandwidth limitation' as reasoning for raising fees yet once again. In reality, the population of America pays more for less than a host of other countries. That our fine government is offering monster cable and internet provider systems the prize of controlling their own activities, charging whatever they like and carving this great nation in pieces like some hunk of shiny cheese, with no structure implied nor required, could be on par with letting ... Umm ... Well ... I cannot think of a solitary thing so blatantly rude, disgusting, mongerous, elitist or ethically morally (dare I say 'legally'?) snobbish as to let the system designed to offer us the world, cloud the truth and poison our minds with inundations of 'entertainment' is being considered license by federal law to enhance its own glorification by dumbing down the population that makes them money. SHAME ON YOU. AND YOUR SILLY WALLETS.
