

7521350384.txt

I live and work in San Francisco surrounded by a vibrant economy of people who are creating new businesses through the internet. If the FCC allows cable providers or other internet service providers to charge more for higher speeds, the result will be a dramatic slowdown in new businesses and new jobs that cannot compete with cable monopolies. Internet service in this country already struggles enough given the lack of competition in the internet service provider industry. This would only make things worse. Please preserve net neutrality and do not allow charging money for priority speeds!!

Sincerely,

Ben Patton