Please stop the merger between Comcast and Time-Warner to prevent Comcast from becoming a political force in America. Currently, in my opinion, thru its wholly owned cable station CNBC, it appears the entire day's programming is slanted extremely heavily towards the right. Supporting guests, comments, news-interpretations etc all are biased towards helping the Republicans and hurting the Democrats. In my opinion it starts early in the day with SquawkBox and continues thru to 7:00p in the evening. It appears that each employee tries to out-do the other in being politically-bold. Even one employee said, "I know I'm not supposed to say this...but I will anyway...and he went on to make his political comment. If each employee of CNBC wants to be a Democrat or Republican-that is totally their right and that is what America is all about. But Comcast appears to me to have taken it on to be a political force and--maybe, just maybe--try to help shape political opinion thru what news is played, how news is emphasized and which guests are scheduled to be on. I think there are many people who are more expert than I who can address this set-up and their programming style/intent. I would suggest one who has seen plenty of this, and would be good to question, is Allan Goolsbee [formerly on Obama's Economic Advisory Council??], while being a guest on SquawkBox.

But the worst of this whole situation is that it appears they're mixing politics with the finances of the U.S. and the World, but mainly it appears they're mixing politics within Wall Street goings-on and transactions.

This has to be stopped and the DOJ, SEC and FCC should have been all over this years ago. Do your job for America!

I really don't think you have to waste a single tear over Comcast-you try to look up their stock and it has gone up like a rocket: it appears to me in 2009 it was about 11.xx and now it's approaching 60.xx.
