I think that its ridiculous to require internet companies to pay cable companies more money so that their services work properly. The people that pay for the internet service are already paying so that the services they subscribe to will work properly. Why should the cable companies be paid twice for the same distribution of content? All that this new law will lead to is the internet companies raising prices for their services to offset the amount they have to pay to the cable companies. This law is a direct backlash from the cable companies to the "cord cutters". Cable companies have lost "cord cutter's" cable subscriptions due to insane pricing and terrible customer service, and are looking to retaliate.
