Net neutrality is not only important to me, but it is also important to everyone else who uses the internet. Now, here in the United States of America, there aren't a lot of people that don't use the internet. This is the richest and most wealthy country on the planet. So now, our large service provider oligopolies want to demolish our rights as Americans by making competitors and little websites charge ludicrous fees for normal speeds. This is not real net neutrality, this is not what the people want, this is not what the United States of America should be having to deal with. I want the FCC to throw out it's current net neutrality rules and to reclassify ISP's as common carriers making the internet equally accessible to all. Internet Service Providers, with the key word here being provider, are trying to bring in an age of oppression and wealth for few. These companies did not invent the internet. it is not theirs to restrict. This madness must end.
