

I oppose the proposed FCC rule dividing the internet into "fast and slow lanes" controlled by providers. Internet access is essential in modern life, as are electricity and telephone service. Such division is strongly anti-competitive and will degrade markets and the ability of citizens to have meaningful, fast and timely communications by the internet. The proposed rule erodes all of these and must not be implemented. It serves onky the interests of large service providers, not our citizens.