All this has happened before (see United States vs Paramount Pictures inc
<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/U...>

Paramount owned movie studios, the distribution network and the theaters effectively ending any competition. They were forcing its Theaters to buy movie 'bundles' a year in advance and had the studios producing junk. The result was the break up of Paramount and the separation of studios (content providers) from theaters (delivery infrastructure) and the ending of force purchase of 'bundles'. The immediate effect was higher quality content (better movies) and higher quality delivery systems (better theaters).

So, do you think we should file an anti trust suit against the bunch of them? get our Al a carte and better infrastructure with one action?
