All ISPs charge for services to begin with. On top of that, they have speed tiers to choose from. This has been part of the market for quite some time. Faster speed is nothing new. I currently pay for faster service from my ISP because my family uses Internet Media as our entertainment.

If the ISPs want to charge other companies for faster speed and me for faster speed, whats the point in having tiers for me to choose from?

Thats why the market is perfect the way it is. Need internet only for email? Choose the slowest package. Want to watch shows online, instead of traditional cable? Choose the fastest package you can afford.

Keep it the same. Keep it fair. No one is going without right now.
