Neutrality on the internet meant that information can be passed, regardless of the origin or opinion of the sender, over a medium that could NOT arbitrarily judge it's worth. If net neutrality is destroyed, the common net user will be forced into buying content rights from innumerable different sources, some of whom may go even further and not allow you to have opposing companies' content at all - or even the source software itself.

The neutrality of information, of opinions and the basic freedom to look for the things I want, wherever I want, and over whatever provider I want, to me - falls under the protections of free speech we have come to expect in the United States. Yes, there are some laws we all agree to - but taking away the manner in which we choose to communicate is simply wrong.

Stand with the people of the U.S. and do NOT allow net neutrality to die.
