Dear FCC,

My name is Ari Videlfsky and I live in Norcross, GA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, it is currently the ultimate place to innovate and try new ideas. Moving away from net neutrality will inevitably monopolize certain, if not all, aspects of the internet and change everyone's web browsing experience for the worse. This would make it much more difficult for smaller internet-based businesses to succeed when they can't afford to pay ISPs what they demand in order for their services to be usable. Further, such a decision would be terrible for absolutely every part of the economy surrounding the internet except ISPs, who will certainly make a massive profit as a result. Finally, any move away from net neutrality will be nearly impossible to reverse. Please rethink your intentions and protect America's net neutrality.

Sincerely,

Ari Videlfsky
