Dear FCC,

My name is Jacob Lewis and I live in Chicago, IL.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

I have been a denizen of the internet, in one form or another, since it was possible for me to do so. The idea that an ISP could determine my level access to one service or another is both frightening and abhorrent. Support full net neutrality, abandon the ideas of "fast lanes", or confirm for all your status as having been bought by the very industry you are supposed to regulate.

Sincerely,

Jacob Lewis
