Dear FCC,

My name is Zoe Rooney and I live in Philadelphia, PA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs would have too much power over users' internet experience and ability to access knowledge.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

Giving ISP subscribers faster loading websites (likely to be primarily existing companies with established budgets for such expenses) is going to quash innovation and make it especially hard for newcomers to share their ideas. This will exacerbate disparities in voice and power to communicate on economic (which often equates to racial) lines, letting the rich get richer by giving them the best website experience capabilities.

Sincerely,

Zoe Rooney
