Dear FCC,

My name is Bill Grava and I live in Livingston, TX.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

The Internet is an integral part of my life: news source, entertainment source, communication source, VOIP telephone highway, good shopping experience. If the ISPs put their lobbying/political budget into strengthening the network's infrastructure rather than getting permission to put up metaphorical tollbooths on the data highway, both their customers and their bottom lines would win.

Sincerely,

Bill Grava
