Dear FCC,

My name is Shane O'Shea and I live in Kent , AR.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it users may have fewer options and a less diverse Internet.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

A reduced internet speed will increase the amount of time taken to research the information needed to help me succeed with my course work. The internet, as it is, is already far too slow and by doing this, not only are you going to start a revolution (people will not accept having to pay higher prices for something that is already considered mediocre); but you're also going to slow down the advancement of human technology.

I find it disgusting that this is even being considered, especially in this day and age. This is nothing but 17-1800's type of thinking: "If you haven't got the money, then you're not worth the dirt on my shoes". The problem with not having the money though is that, you are taking all of ours while still managing to rip us off.

Sincerely,

Shane O'Shea
