

I just heard a conversation of a Comcast customer trying to cancel their internet with a Comcast employee, and what I heard was dreadful. True, I signed up for Comcast because it was what I had in my previous apartment when I moved in, but I guarantee that if this high speed net neutrality passes, I will discontinue my membership with Comcast. Just because they have become popular does not mean that they can treat their customers in the way that was presented in this sound byte. Ever since Citizens United, companies have felt like they can be greedy, and not care for other companies. It really makes our government look bad.
