Dear FCC,

My name is Antoinette Bolz and I live in New Paltz, NY.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

I am a small business owner, and I work with several other businesses: small, medium, and large. They are all filled with very diverse people. Diverse in beliefs, cultures, construction, location and innovation. For all my clients, I provide a service. Having easy access to each and every one of their websites allows me to learn more about how I can best serve them. It allows me to have another look into their business that I am normally not as exposed to. When I seek to refer them to others, the first place I direct people is to their website. Without that ability, many of my clients will suffer.

Sincerely,

Antoinette Bolz
