Dear FCC,

My name is Brian Warnock and I live in Elgin, IL.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

Net neutrality needs to remain in place. Today's economy is dependent upon the web and innovations that are born there. Restricting this resource and hampering competition could be disastrous for us as a nation. Cable companies already hold their customers hostage through regionalized monopolies and "bundle" pricing schemes. Allowing them to further line their pockets by forcing consumers into an outdated business model benefits only them.

Sincerely,

Brian Warnock
