Dear FCC,

My name is Brit Anderson and I live in Geneva, OH.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it users may have fewer options and a less diverse Internet.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as someone who has lived in many different countries, I like being able to access news and information from all over the world. The internet has opened up lines of communication between people of every nationality, which has led to increased understanding of different cultures. This is important not just for the United States, but for the world.

Sincerely,

Brit Anderson
