Dear FCC,

My name is Ginger L. Peterson and I live in Norwalk, OH.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it users may have fewer options and a less diverse Internet.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as a single mom and new home owner I use the internet frequently to; keep up with the world around me, learn what the politicians are saying so I know where to put my vote, look up recipes, DIY projects, parenting advice, crafts and activities, background checks to keep my children safe, plan grocery trips, help my children with homework, and so so much more. I do not have a lot of income and every penny I earn goes towards raising my children, I can barely afford internet as it is. If the ISPs were able to charge even more for the "fast lane" I would be unable to afford it and I would be cut off from much needed information.

Sincerely,

Ginger L. Peterson
