Dear FCC,

My name is Andrew Berg and I live in Los Angeles, CA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

The Internet is important to me because it is the only place where the merit of an idea can cause it to be distributed widely without being filtered by commercial interests. A pay to play internet will drive up the costs of video streaming services, delay and degrade new technologies, and shield entrenched interests from competition. Why should we break the internet?

Sincerely,

Andrew Berg
