Dear FCC,

My name is Alex Coleman and I live in Vienna, VA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it we become a place that can be censored, the Internet is a place of freedom and I support its current condition of neutrality.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because large companies that can afford the fees to be supported by certain ISPs are going to have the ability to create a monopoly.

The Internet is important to me, as it is to everyone in this generation, because its a frontier that we've been able to shape and model into our collective legacy. Be it the official website of the movie Space Jam (1996), the myriad of internet pornography sites, Reddit, or just some everyman's blog, the Internet is our home. To take away part of the freedom of the Internet is to take away a part of ourselves, and despite however "inappropriate" the Internet is deemed, it's something we share as a world, not as a nation. We have the right to browse freely, and if the FCC attempts to revoke our right, the people of the Internet will band together and protest their tyranny. We the people will retain our freedom.

Sincerely,

Alex Coleman
