Dear FCC,

My name is Amelia Beck and I live in Harker Heights, TX.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

I'm a high school teacher, and the internet has provided me with great ways to reach my students. Many times, the only things the students are interested in watching are the silly and strange things that come from the hearts and minds of people like them who are passionate about a subject, not corporations. Please don't take this incredible tool away from future generations, lest the internet, much like our main streets, become a big box superstore instead of mom and pop establishments.

Sincerely,

Amelia Beck
