The Cable companies and the regulatory board should be ashamed of themselves. Our country is already suffering from massive inequality and doing away with net neutrality will only widen the gap. I have had Verizon phone service for years and I will drop it for Verizon's lobbying involvement in this case if it goes through. I've also been holding off on choosing a new ISP in the apartment I moved into last month because I have no idea what my internet service is going to look like. I can't afford to pay a premium for "fast lane" service and I won't pay at all for bullshit service. I really can't tell you how angry I am at this, and I'm even angrier knowing that my anger won't matter.
