

Net neutrality is the First Amendment of the Internet, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data equally. As an Internet user, net neutrality is vitally important to me. The FCC should use its Title II authority to protect it.

Most Americans have only one choice for truly high speed Internet: their local cable company. This is a political failure, and it is an embarrassment. America deserves competition and choice.

Without net neutrality, a bad situation gets even worse. These ISPs will now be able to manipulate our Internet experience by speeding up some services and slowing down others. That kills choice, diversity, and quality.

It also causes tremendous economic harm. If ISPs can speed up favored services and slow others, new businesses will no longer be able to rely on a level playing field. When ISPs can slow your site and destroy your business at will, how can any startup attract investors?

My friends, family, and I use the Internet for conversation and fun, but also for work and business. When you let ISPs mess with our Internet experience, you are attacking our social lives, our entertainment, and our economic well being. We won't stand for it.

ISPs are opposing Title II so that they can destroy the FCC's net neutrality rules in court. This is the same trick they pulled last time. Please, let's not be fooled again. Title II is the strong, legally sound way to enforce net neutrality. Use it.

The internet is at its best and highest potential when it remains an open resource to learn, educate, inspire and promote and provide opportunity.

Both censorship and biased bullying, manipulating the very foundations of the internet for unfair advantages and a monopolistic stipend is egregiously and ethically wrong.

To allow the internet to be used merely to fatten the pockets of the ignorant and cripple the future prospects of millions is to acquiesce to short-sighted, small-minded idiotic opportunism.

To clip, curtail, limit, damage, reduce, enervate, create alternatives to, frustrate, or in any other way threaten the neutrality of the internet is in no way a welcomed or advantageous aspiration. It is wrong and harms everyone in the short and long runs.

It harms everyone socially, financially, economically and consciously, as well as providing a building block for unmitigated corruption and a call for all to follow in the slow descent to destruction.

I reject changes and challenges to net neutrality. It should not be altered or abbreviated. It is NOT in the peoples, the internets or the nations best interests to allow net neutrality to fall into the twisting design of those whose interests are not with the people, the internet and the nation, but merely the swell of their capital and the rotten sweetness of silenced promise.

To alter net neutrality, putting it into unfit hands, is to betray the interests of the American and indeed, the vast majority of free people worldwide. It is not for greater good and it is not welcome.
