

Dear FCC,

My name is S Finster and I live in Livonia, NY.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

I am a college sophomore who is trying to work through college while also participating on my school's division one fencing team. I already have to take out an unsubsidized loan a year, and will graduate college heavily in debt already. I use the internet for a variety of reasons for my education, there are several websites including my university's accounts managing system that students at my university are required to visit in one way or another. I can not afford to pay more for internet than what I do now, I can't afford to pay more for websites necessary to my education. Without net neutrality internet service providers will make it near impossible for me to access necessary websites and it will set the innovation and access that the internet has allowed the US back tremendously. This is basically a really bad idea.

Sincerely,

S Finster
