Dear FCC,

My name is Kelly Peters and I live in Philadelphia , PA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

As a therapist for children and families facing struggles and difficulties I have seen first hand the power that a free and open internet has to connect, uplift and unite people. I have also experienced first hand the depths that my internet and cable providers have gone to. There is virtually no competition and very little choice left. I fear that without net neutrality the families with less means as well as organizations and companies that I support, and have seen emerge over the past few years will not have the opportunity to grow and connect on the internet. Any legislation that impedes net neutrality does nothing to serve the people of this country and only benefits the rich companies who already control an unbelievable amount of power in this market.

Sincerely,

Kelly Peters
