It's interesting that verizon, with it's team of lawyers was able to file it's comment only on the last day. Or perhaps they filed on the last day to try and avoid giving the public time to reply to their comments?

This is just more proof that these big corporation ISP's are not acting in good faith. They are only interested in maximizing their profit even at the expense of the public good. The internet MUST be kept open. We already have some of the worst Internet Service Providers in the developed world. Do not hand them even more power and take away even more options from us the consumer.
