

7521640557.txt

Net neutrality is a terrible thing as although price discrimination allows for greater revenue streams for ISPs and greater options for customers willing to spend more, it creates an unfair environment in which information knowledge data and communication go fastest to the highest bidder. It is a slippery slope to terrible service for the cheapest of services as ISPs will have the right to 'slow' existing connections. Also ISPs already price discriminate with fibre optic wire etc. information is the most empowering enlightening interesting thing in the world and the neutrality and freedom of it should always be preserved.