Dear FCC,

My name is Danielle Skapura and I live in League City, TX.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The internet is the core of most citizens daily technological experience. We are free to be whoever we want, explore new interests, diverse ideas/cultures, shop, create, and generally just maneuver in a way that is unique to each individual. Mainstream media has a stronghold on TV, because what little guy can make a big network? But any little guy (or gal) can go on the internet and make a real change. It's the poor man's, no... the ANY man's sounding board. Why stifle any more voices? I understand that we've mostly sold out to big companies and the almighty dollar. Let's not lose the internet to that awful paradigm as well.

Sincerely,

Danielle Skapura
