

7521677993.txt

The Internet has become THE prime source of information, collaboration, and entertainment - this should be obvious to anyone who uses it. We cannot allow the few companies who control access to the Internet to bottleneck services to their economic and political rivals. More importantly, allowing "fast lanes" for the content these companies deem most valuable or most pleasing to their shareholders is an egregious violation of what makes the Internet so important to begin with - freedom.

The FTC cannot allow the Internet to become yet another politicized, economic war zone in which only the content available is what a particular group of shareholders feels is valid. The Internet offers the freedom to choose content from a near infinite range, and it is sad to think that the Internet we have come to know and love could be turned into a censored, corporate battlezone.

Please stand up for real net neutrality.