In most areas it seems there is one or maybe two ISP's to choose from. The chosen few will be allowed to control which and how content is delivered and at what speed. If a free and open dissemination of information is needed for a democracy, removing net neutrality limits access by the informed voter and therefore democracy. The internet has become a utility (for a lack of a better word). Allowing a handful of people to dictate how it is accessed and used by the rest of us is an oligarchy.
